

JEFFRIES-JOHNSON PRIZE PICTURES

Heads of Connecticut Cities and Boroughs Urged to Enforce Prohibiting Ordinances

Views of Gov. Frank B. Weeks

Policy of this State is Against Exhibitions Known as Prize Fights—Moving Pictures of the Fight are Much More Objectionable and Should be Prevented—Suggestion to Proper Authorities and a Personal Request

Hartford, Conn., July 7.—That the policy of the state is against the displaying of moving pictures of the Jeffries-Johnson fight was expressed by Governor Frank B. Weeks in a statement issued by him tonight.

Statement by Governor Weeks

The policy of the state of Connecticut is against exhibitions known as prize fights. The statutes of the state provide a maximum penalty of five years imprisonment for any person who is principal or second in a prize fight and a fine and imprisonment for any person who is present at and gives countenance to a prize fight.

A Demoralizing Exhibition

"It is against public morals and decency to prize fights in our state, in my opinion the public exhibition in the state of moving pictures of prize fights is in my opinion more objectionable than the fight itself, because it would reach and demoralize a much larger class of citizens than the fight itself, and the exhibition concerning this particular fight would be attended with features which should be prevented.

Suggestion to Prosecuting Officers

"It is illogical to prohibit prize fights as against public morals and decency, and to permit the exhibition of moving pictures of prize fights, which are in my opinion more objectionable than the fight itself, because it would reach and demoralize a much larger class of citizens than the fight itself, and the exhibition concerning this particular fight would be attended with features which should be prevented.
